

No Brotherly Love for Entrepreneurs: Its Never Sunny for Philadelphia's Small Businesses (Institute For Justice City Studies)

The city of Philadelphia is governed by the ordinary things one finds in American cities: a mayor, a city council, various bureaucracies. But it is also governed by something else: the word no. At nearly every level, Philadelphia's city government and related bureaucracies operate with a one-word vocabulary; whatever the question is, the answer is No. In field after field from zoning to permitting to occupational licensing would-be entrepreneurs hear that answer time and again. But as anyone who has ever spent time around a toddler can attest, a one word vocabulary quickly wears thin and in this (as in many things) what is tolerable in a toddler makes for terrible public policy. Saying nothing but no eventually yields exactly what one would expect: nothing. For more information visit www.ij.org.
